

Disability Annuities for Railroad Employees

The Railroad Retirement Act provides disability annuities for railroaders who become totally or occupationally disabled. Medicare coverage before age 65 is also available for totally disabled employees and those suffering from chronic kidney disease.

The following questions and answers describe these disability benefits, their requirements, and how to apply for them.

1. How do railroad retirement provisions for total disability and occupational disability differ?

A total disability annuity is based on permanent disability for all employment and is payable at any age to employees with at least 10 years of railroad service.

An occupational disability annuity is based on disability for the employee's regular railroad occupation and is payable at age 60 if the employee has 10 years of service, or at any age if the employee has at least 20 years of service. A "current connection with the railroad industry" is also required for an occupational disability annuity. The current connection requirement is normally met if the employee worked for a railroad in at least 12 of the last 30 consecutive months before applying for a disability annuity.

2. How do the standards for total disability and occupational disability differ?

An employee is considered to be totally disabled if medical evidence shows a permanent physical and/or mental impairment preventing the performance of any regular and gainful work. A condition is considered to be permanent if it has lasted or may be expected to last for at least 12 months or result in death.

An employee is considered to be occupationally disabled if a physical and/or mental impairment prevents the employee from performing the duties of his or her regular railroad occupation, even though the employee may be able to perform other kinds of work. An employee's regular occupation is generally that particular work he or she has performed for hire in more calendar months than any other work during the last five years; or that work which was performed for hire in at least one-half of all the months in which the employee worked for hire during the last 15 years.

3. How does the amount of a railroad retirement disability annuity compare to a social security disability benefit?

Disabled railroad workers retiring directly from the railroad industry at the end of Fiscal Year 1998 were awarded about $1,770 a month on the average, while awards for disabled workers under social security averaged about $740.

4. When is early Medicare coverage available for the disabled?

Medicare coverage before age 65 may begin after a totally disabled employee has been entitled to a disability annuity for at least 24 months. The fact that an employee is initially awarded an occupational disability annuity does not preclude early Medicare coverage, if the employee's physical and/or mental condition is such that he or she is totally and permanently disabled.

Medicare coverage on the basis of kidney disease requiring dialysis or a kidney transplant is available not only to employee annuitants, but also to employees who have not retired but meet certain minimum service requirements, spouses, and dependent children. For those suffering from chronic kidney disease, coverage may begin with the third month after dialysis treatment begins, or earlier under certain conditions.

5. Do the railroad retirement disability annuity requirements include a waiting period similar to that required for social security disability benefits?

Yes. A five-month waiting period beginning with the month after the month of the onset of disability is required before railroad retirement disability annuity payments can begin. However, an applicant need not wait until this five-month period is over to file for benefits. See questions 6 and 7 below for more information on filing for disability benefits.

6. What documentation is required when filing for a railroad retirement disability annuity?

Employees filing for disability annuities are required to submit medical evidence supporting their claim. Applicants should be prepared to furnish dates of hospitalization, names and dosages of medications, names of doctors, etc. Applicants may also be asked to take special medical examinations given by a doctor named by the Board. If a disability applicant is receiving workers' compensation or public disability benefits, notice of such payments must be submitted.

Sources of medical evidence for railroad retirement disability purposes include the applicant's railroad employer, personal physician and hospital, the Social Security Administration or the agency paying workers' compensation or public disability benefits. This evidence generally should not be more than 12 months old. In addition, proof of age and proof of any military service credit claimed and a description of past work activity will also be required.

7. What is the best way to apply for a railroad retirement disability annuity or early Medicare coverage?

Applications for railroad retirement disability annuities are generally filed at one of the Board's field offices, or with a traveling Board representative at an itinerant point, or by telephone and mail. However, applications by rail employees for early Medicare coverage on the basis of kidney disease have to be filed with an office of the Social Security Administration, rather than the Railroad Retirement Board.

To expedite filing for a railroad retirement disability annuity, disabled employees or a family member should call or write the nearest Railroad Retirement Board field office to schedule an appointment. For the appointment, claimants should bring in any medical evidence in their possession and any medical records they can secure from their treating physicians. Employees who are unable to personally visit a Board office or meet a Board representative at an itinerant point may request special assistance, such as having a Board representative come to a hospital or the employee's home. Board personnel assist disabled employees with their applications and advise them on how to obtain any additional medical evidence required or any other necessary documents or records.

However, applications for employee disability annuities should not be filed until an employee is no longer in compensated service to a railroad employer. Compensated service includes the receipt of pay for time lost, some wage continuation payments, or any other employer compensation precluding the payment of railroad retirement benefits. But employees receiving sickness benefits from the Board need not wait until these benefits are exhausted before filing for a disability annuity. The Board adjusts payments for any benefit duplications at the time a disability annuity is awarded.

8. Can an individual continue to receive an employee disability annuity even if he or she does some work after it begins?

Any work or earnings by a disabled annuitant may be considered an indication of an individual's recovery from disability, regardless of the amount. Therefore, any employment must be reported promptly to avoid potential overpayments.

Special earnings rules apply to disability annuitants and they are more stringent than those that apply to annuitants who have retired on the basis of age and service. Disability annuities are not payable for any month in which the annuitant earns more than $400 in any employment or self-employment, exclusive of work-related expenses. Withheld payments will be restored if earnings for the year are less than $5,000 after deduction of disability-related work expenses. Otherwise, the annuity is subject to a deduction of one month's benefit for each multiple of $400 earned over $4,800 (the last $200 or more of earnings over $4,800 counts as $400). Failure to report such earnings could involve a penalty charge equal to no less than one month's annuity and is in addition to any overpayment assessed.

These disability work restrictions cease upon a disabled employee annuitant's attainment of full retirement age (age 65 in 1999), when the annuitant becomes subject to the work and earnings restrictions applicable to employee annuities based on age and service. This transition is effective no earlier than full retirement age, even if the annuitant had 30 years of service.

9. Must an employee relinquish employment rights in order to receive a disability annuity?

A disabled employee may continue to hold employment rights until full retirement age, currently age 65. However, in order for the supplemental annuity to be paid or for an eligible spouse to receive benefits, a disability annuitant under full retirement age must relinquish his or her rights.
